PROGRAM

Using the spatial dimension of the economy as core case, the conference will bring together the various understandings and approaches to illuminate the relevance of space for economic activities. Here, we follow the proposition that the diversity and variety in the empirical material and conceptual thinking might indicate the existence of a varieties of refiguration. A perspective on the varieties of refiguration could allow us to bring together the various ways in which (economic) actors relate to space, have conflicts about it and develop institutional settlements. A debate on "Varieties of Refiguration?" will discuss how various spatial arrangements are interlinked as multiple spatialities and how they change. In the processes of the refiguration of spaces, we can assume both convergent and divergent tendencies. We understand that this convergence and divergence could occur within and between spatial arrangements as well as within refiguration, in different societies, social groups, and regions/cities.
